

Bush Telegraph

In Africa when you want to get the message out there you rely on the bush telegraph and stories are passed from friend to friend, through the wind and the pulsating beat of the drum till every one gets the message, whether they are in the village across the river or in a far away land.

In today's modern world the beat of the drum has been replaced by the click of the mouse and friends and villagers near and far are within easy reach. We have created a website that we think will be bring together all those people even from faraway lands who have an interest in African Wildlife Photography.

We have brought together some of the top photographic safari guides in Africa who will take you on a journey of discovery not only of the animals they photographs but the techniques they use to capture these wonderful moments.

The Wildlife Photographer Magazine is a quarterly online e-magazine and has been established to meet the demand for reliable independent information on photographic techniques, equipment, new products, photo galleries, forums, news and Photographic Safaris to Africa.

In order to spread the word we invite you to take a look at what we have to offer on our website and ask that you use your Bush Telegraph to tell a friend to tell a friend to tell a friend so visit us on
